

Editor's Comment:

This revised manuscript is attractive and smoothly written, but the narrative flow has to be substantially improved prior it to be accepted for publication at the JSRR. To this end the following review comments can be considered.

Due to extensive adoption and utility of the "Free Wi-Fi Dash Motors" entity, there is need authors to:
-verify all existing narrative (no need to add more text) related to this entity by adding cross-citing published papers that are referring or approaching it. This cross-citing expansion can be updated throughout the text content, where the "Free Wi-Fi Dash Motors" is involved.

-specify its operability functions in a graphical, diagram, or flow chart Figure.

The transportation sector is inherently related to passengers and commuters who are linked in-between urban transferring (as the "interstate"). However, in this respect it is not clear at this analysis whether the proposed analysis could be linked to other nearby, or transboundary-to Nigeria, urban African cities (or what aspects are associated with such scaling up prospects).

There is not conceptual consistency of the "3.Respondents' characteristics" heading, to contain the umbrella of entities:

"Characteristics..... (main section 3)" cannot jointly contain firstly "assessment of..... (subsection 3.1)", (after assessment): "determination of..... (subsection 3.2)", and (after assessment and after determination): "identification of..... (subsection 3.3)". The presentation of these headings is messy, and it does not follow logical order of presentation.

3.1 Assessment of level of intention to adopt free Wi-Fi Dash Motors

3.2 Determination of predictive effect of adoption intention on continued patronage/adoption behavior

3.3 Identification of factors that optimize value creation among consumers (passengers)

Therefore, the narrative reorganization towards a conceptually coherent manner is recommended.

The monetary unit of monthly income in naira, it can be calculated in US dollars. It is "naira" a common monetary unit of understanding the "in thousands naira" towards the "in hundreds $". Alternatively the annual income, in replacing the monthly income, it can be denoted.

At the current analysis it is not clear what is the Discussion section, and the key-aspects: constraints, barriers, developmental challenges, which is anticipated to be succinctly included in such a distinct Discussion section. Up to one extra and cross-cited page it is adequate. The critique of subsection 3.3 cannot merely be burdened on and bounded on four responses (subjective opinions) but, based on the responses collected, general outcomes of wider applicability and conclusions' drawn it is anticipated (objective findings, sustaining broader comprehension).

Decision : Acceptance after considering the corrections recommended
