Compulsory REVISION comments	In this article there is structuration in form and presentation. There is no correlation in incidence compared to the global rate. Despite including all ages, there is a bias in the results of risk of suffering from some type of cancer.
Minor REVISION comments	The records in Kenya that are the only ones reported may not represent the cancer rate across the country, but they are important in order to have a basis and to account for cancers, detect others and treat early. It would be appropriate to try more records in other counties.
Optional/General comments	This session is well distributed and achieves the general objective of informing in general terms the types of population where the study is carried out, as well as the prevalence of the existing types of cancer and the ages of the study.
